One of the wonderful perks of working at The Wallace Collection is to be able to walk through the quiet, empty galleries before opening. I am often drawn to the same room on the first floor, which houses paintings by Rembrandt and his School and, in particular, to Rembrandt's magnificent portrait of his son Titus (c.1657).

The result of this collaboration has been remarkable, and The Leiden Collection is now among the largest private assemblages of Dutch art in the world. The Collection focuses on Rembrandt and his School, illuminating the personalities and themes that shaped the Golden Age over five generations.

About the Collection - The Leiden Collection

"TASCHEN's outsize, close-up format works superbly for Rembrandt, who built his compositions on intricate details evoked in fabulously free, loose marks, every stroke its own drama, animating portraits, spiritual narratives, everyday scenes; texture, colour, light all resonate here."
